Kinetoscope

OFFICIAL REPORTER PAY $10

By Nkiru O. from Canada

The Kinetoscope is an early motion picture exhibition device. It was invented by the great inventors Thomas Alva Edison and William Dickson of the United States in 1891. Edison called the invention a "Kinetoscope," using the Greek words "kineto" which means movement and "scopos" meaning to watch. It was designed for films to be viewed individually through the window of a cabinet housing its components. It creates the illusion of movement by conveying a strip of perforated film bearing sequential images over a light source with a high-speed shutter. In 1894, the first commercial motion picture exhibition was given in New York City using ten Kinetoscopes.

Eurasian Brown Bear

OFFICIAL REPORTER PAY $5

By Glenda J. from MN

The Brown Bear is found all around the northern continents, in Europe, Asia and North America. In North America it is called the grizzly bear, because its fur gives it a grizzly appearance. Larger than the European Brown Bear, the Grizzly Bear lives in the northwestern United States, western Canada and Alaska. Its snout houses a superbly sensitive nose, which sniffs out prey and intruders long before it sees or hears them. BEARS HAVE POOR EYESIGHT, ARE EASILY STARTLED, AND DANGEROUS. Males weigh 300-705 lbs and females weigh 200-400 lbs; its length is 5 ft -9 ft. A female bear usually has a litter of 2 cubs. The cubs stay with the mother for about a year and a half. Brown Bears eats roots, fungi, grass, berries, honey, insects, fish, and mammals. Brown Bears can live between 20-30 years.
